MONESSEN BECOMES FIRST CITY IN COUNTY BY BIG MAJORITY

Third Class City Charter Goes Over The Top

The election in Monessen yesterday resulted in an overwhelming victory for the Third Class city form of government. The results surprised even its staunchest supporters. The contest was a deep seated civic move for a change from the present system that has resulted so disastrously for the town.

The proposition occupied such an obscure place on the ballot that supporters of the measure feared voter might fail to find it and in each of the precincts volunteers agreed to pass out cards calling attention to the issue. The opposition saw the treacherous sentiment favoring the city charter and hope of defeating it was early abandoned. The vote of the several precincts follows:

England Comments

London Nov. 3—The United States has revolted against supermen in politics, the Evening Standard said today. The Globe called Senator Harding's election a fortunate thing for anglo-American friendship.

"It is a good thing that Gov. Cox was snowed under," the Globe said. "He had pledged an interference in Irish affairs which England could not and would not have brooked. Fortunately Cox will return to the obscurity from whence lower type politicians of his type rarely emerge."

Senator Harding does not intend that America shall play a part in the controversies of a moribund league of nations, the Globe said. The league must be remodeled to permit American membership if it hopes ever to acquire power, this newspaper declared.

The Evening Standard said the voters realized Harding stood for the league of nations but favored an association.

"Names and forms are unimportant," the Standard added "but a cooperative spirit is essential. We hope and believe that spirit will rule in Harding

Wyant Receives Big Majority

Returns from 111 precincts out of the 119 in Westmoreland county gave Adam M. Wyant 6,000 of a majority over John H. Wilson, the Democratic candidate. There are 55 precincts yet to be heard from in this county and it is believed Wyant will make gains over the present figures. Butler county gives Wyant a lead of 600 votes, with all but 14 precincts in. It is believed that final returns will give him the election by upwards of 7,000 of a majority. He carried practically all of the large towns in both counties.

The town of Butler gave him a lead of upwards of 300 and he won out in all of the large towns in Westmoreland county, including Latrobe, Scottdale, New Kensington, Jeannette and Monessen. A hard fight was put up in Greensburg, but he will likely have a majority of about 100 votes on the final count there.

REPUBLICAN IN POLITICS

THE NEW GOVERNMENT

The first step in converting Monessen from a borough into a city has been taken. The fact that the voters gave a favorable decision at the polls yesterday by an overwhelming majority is proof positive that the sentiment for a change from the present condition has been a deep seated one. Without question the voters have not erred.

The move for a third class city was one inspired by the highest and most unselfish motives. It was not a political movement, but a civic movement and those who were foremost in advocating it were legion. The fact that it has been successful in yesterday's election does not say the great work so generously undertaken is by any means done. In fact it has just begun. A government is no better than the people who compose it and if the people cease to take an active part in electing the right men to fill the several offices the city will again suffer mismanagement. But regardless of who is elected the taxpayers have greater protective powers under the city charter than under the old borough government.

The fact that ten mills is the limit that can be fixed for operating expenses is a great protection. Again eliminating any possibility of a floating debt is an assurance that the taxpayers will know where every dollar is spent and the permanent improvements that we must have we will have if our city continues to spend money.

In its efforts to readjust the affairs of our city consistent with its growth and importance The Independent will carry its campaign to the people sincere and honest; it will not misrepresent in any statement it may make and will strive to deal in honest figures and render honest opinion.

With a policy such as this and working heart and soul with our best citizens we have faith that the present unwholesome civic conditions will soon be eroded and that we will start our new city form of government with the best business men the town has and that we will all work unitedly for a better as well as greater city. And we assure all who have come to the rescue that our work has only been well begun and that in order to accomplish what every good citizen wants, it will take both time and effort, and some sacrifice on the part of everybody.

ARMISTICE DAY

Next Sunday will mark the passing of two strange and agitated years. What sum total of happiness it was that came over the war torn world that joyous morning back in 1918. One can well hear the bells ringing and whistles blowing the third week in November and the people rejoicing that the world had solved all its problems. With threat of autocratic power removed, it appeared as if any other little questions remaining unsettled could easily be handled.

It did not take long to discover that the old problems remained, only aggravated by burdens created by a terrific war. Under the stress of this heritage of war, people and nations began to act in a most selfish manner, grabbing for themselves, and failing to consider the interests of others.

Viewing what they regard as a great decline of idealism, many people have become disheartened. There is no reason for any lack of faith People proved themselves capable of great sacrifices for a common cause during the war. These elements remain in their nature, and will manifest themselves again.

Meanwhile let Armistice Day remind everyone of America's great achievement By sacrifice, energy, determination, courage, results were accomplished which no one could have dreamed of as possible. An unmilitary people showed themselves more than a match for the most warlike nation on earth

The force and spirit that accomplished this grand result will be able to meet the difficulties of the coming years as they may arise. Such troubles as are now in sight are really small compared with those that were surmounted.

HARDING'S ELECTION

The decisiveness with which the American people swept Senator Warren G Harding into the presidency and gave him a safe majority of support in both congress and senate, demonstrates fully that they want a change from Democratic misrule. There are no final figures available at this hour to determine majorities and pluralities, but the Republican cause has won. The platform and pledges of the party stand and the American people are hopeful that the reforms so solemnly promised will come about.

We have faith in the party and the men who have been chosen and are of the belief that the war-time legislation will be repealed and laws passed that will protect our industries and our labor and that the social and economical problems will be solved to the benefit of all classes. The victory does not come unexpected but the responsibility of victory rests with the party that has been so overwhelmingly swept into power.

TYPHOID EPIDEMIC EBATED

Conditions in the typhoid fever epidemic at Bentleyville, have improved to such an extent that the two Red Cross nurses sent there to help care for the large number of persons suffering from the disease have been relieved from duty.

While many of the persons stricken during the epidemic are still confined to their homes, all have made such steady progress in convalescing that the local authorities decided that the assistance of the two nurses in coping with the situation was no longer required.

Under the supervision of the sanitary engineer sent there by the state health department sanitary conditions have been improved and every step taken to prevent another such outbreak

Life Story of the Next President of the United States, Warren G. Harding

By RAYMOND CLAPPER
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

Marion, O., Nov. 3.—If Warren G. Harding, now president-elect of the United States, had only been born in a log cabin—but he wasn't and any truthfully intimate story about him must begin with the bald statement that he was born in a small frame house at Blooming Grove, a village near here, of poor but thrifty parents, his father being a struggling country doctor who rolled his own pills and treated horses as well.

The log cabin story was killed by Harding himself shortly after he was nominated for the presidency and the incident reveals more about the man who is to be the next president of the United States than could be told in a book. It illustrates the absence of any "front" about Harding and his simple sincerity, one of the outstanding traits of the man.

Just after the Chicago convention nominated Harding some of his over enthusiastic workers started the story that he was born in a log cabin. It was getting a good running start when newspaper correspondents

Senator Warren G. Harding

were called into Harding's office at Washington one day and given a short typewritten statement signed by the candidate, denying in toto the log cabin story.

"I don't like to spoil a good story for you boys," Harding said in explanation, "but the truth is I wasn't born in a log cabin at all. I wish I had been but alas, it was only a frame house."

But there is a good story in Harding's spectacular rise anyway. Born in the obscurity of a struggling village in central Ohio, exactly fifty-five years ago yesterday, Harding, doing business on a shoestring most of the time has now reached the pinnacle to which only twenty-eight other men in the entire history of this nation have climbed.

It will be difficult for anyone to really believe that the man and woman whose names are on millions of lips today are just plain, ordinary middle western Americans who have spent their lives in a small town struggling for a place among the substantial citizens of the locality.

Nevertheless they are the people novelists seek to describe as the typical Americans, prosperous in a small way, intelligent and fairly well educated, though not so well read perhaps, knowing little about many commonplace matters, extremely hospitable and generous, severely conventional, regular attendants at church and lodge meetings, fond of fried chicken and of sitting in rocking chairs on the front porch afterward.

There you have the Hardings.

They haven't changed much with the good fortune that has recently come to them. It is true that Mrs. Harding used to work in her own kitchen and that now they have a cook, but her husband still has his clothes darned to make them wear longer, he shaves himself with an old fashioned razor, his shirt cuffs are turned when they get frayed on one side, and Mrs. Harding herself wears a hat clear through the season and sometimes longer for she was wearing her last summer straw hat in October this year.

The Hardings live in a big green house with a large white front porch on Mount Vernon avenue, a quiet shady street here. It is a good street but not in the most exclusive section of Marion, if a town of thirty thousand could have an exclusive section.

There is nothing fancy about the Harding home, inside or out. It is far less pretentious than those of most Marion merchants or citizens of similar standing. The Hardings do not "dress for dinner," nor have tea in the afternoon. Harding likes waffles for breakfast and a well done beefsteak for dinner. There is refinement at their table, but not "style" and no stranger would ever be embarrassed by a confusing array of forks and spoons. They live just like other Americans of moderate means. Mrs. Harding looks after her potted plants and the senator makes frequent rounds of inspection after breakfast or lunch to see that there are no loose boards on the back yard walk or to examine the screen hinges that have been squeaking for several days.

One thing every visitor at Marion discovers the first thing—The Hardings are just what they are, as Mrs Harding puts it.

Harding's closest friends have often expressed regret that the campaign photographs of the candidate showed a rather stern visage. They probably portray quite faithfully the features of Harding as he appears in the midst of an earnest speech. But there is another Harding which shows far more warmth sitting around the dinner table while political troubles are left outside for the moment. Then the genial, easy going, good humored Harding holds sway. Pushing back his chair a little from the table, he will light one of his favorite long rough stogies and look reminiscent.

"Warren, why don't you tell them how you got fired from your first newspaper job," Mrs. Harding will say, turning a twinkling eye on her guests.

And Warren, rather reluctantly, begins by saying, "Oh, they wouldn't be interested in that."

Then he tells about his first job as a reporter on the old Marion Mirror, a zealously Democratic paper. Harding, just eighteen, wrote up births, marriages, deaths, met all trains and did politics on the side. His boss, busy in politics, was out of town a good deal of the time and let Warren write the editorials warning him that they must be fervently Democratic in tone.

"You know some of the best editorials I ever wrote were for that Democratic paper," Harding says. But all the while he was an active Republican worker, though not old enough to vote. He wore one of the large Blaine campaign hats adopted by Republican partisans during that campaign. He got away with it for a while, but local Democrats began to complain to Harding's boss about him allowing a Republican to get out his paper. Then Harding made his first political decision. It was either discard the Blaine hat or be fired. He was fired.

"I have been a strong party man ever since," Harding adds.

Then you may hear Harding tell how he and a boy chum between them borrow $300 and bought the Marion Star after the sheriff had taken charge of the property. They printed it one page at a time on a small job press—and it was the first small town daily in Ohio, Harding says. But the partnership broke up when the telephone was introduced in Marion. Harding, who had to get all the advertising and collect news as well, wanted to put in a telephone to save time. His partner said it was a silly idea. Harding ordered it anyway and the partner, coming back to the office was so angry that he demanded dissolution of the partnership and insisted on being put on salary.

"I put him on the payroll at nine dollars a week," Harding said. "And he was better off than I was then."

But the young publisher struggled along, setting up his own type often, writing all the news and soliciting most of the advertising. When the Star grew to need a circulation manager, Mrs. Harding dropped her housework and took the job. She went down to the office every day, kept the books of all subscribers, collected for the paper, hired the carriers and supervised the distribution of the paper from the time it came out of the press.

"In those days I knew every subscriber of the Star and I knew just how much he owed on his paper bill," Mrs. Harding said one day. She also had her troubles with the newsboys. One day a youngster ran a small electric wire around the press to the rack where Mrs. Harding pulled out the papers. When she put down her hand to take out a bunch, she touched the live wire and got shocked.

She started on the trail of the offending youngster who had given her trouble before and, having obtained his mother's proxy, after an altercation some weeks before, promptly collared the young man, turned him over her knee and spanked him. A few Sunday ago, fifty former newsboys, of the Star, all now prosperous young men, scattered in many cities, came to Marion. They were gathered on the front porch porch with Senator and Mrs. Harding.

"Where is the boy Mrs. Harding spanked?" Senator Harding asked. Five hands went up in the crowd.

That is Mrs. Harding's way. She is frank outspoken and the most inveterate campaigner of the two. She appears to really enjoy shaking hands during a political affair and around her home here she is out from early morning until after dark greeting visitors.

Her good humored manner has made a hit with political audiences throughout the campaign.

When Harding went to the Senate Mrs. Harding set up a home in Washington, but to the consternation of many of the ladies of the senate she continued to invite her old friends in regardless of their social standing in the "senatorial circle." If she runs true to form, anyone in Marion probably will be able to wander into the White House and get an invitation to stay to dinner.

Mrs. Harding has what they call "gumption" out here in Ohio. In her youth she was a skilled horsewoman, her father, who was a wealthy business man here, having owned a fine string of racing horses. Now she takes most of her recreation in the form of automobile riding. That is one reason Hardings never travel on the train if good roads are available. Most of the trips to and from Washington are by motor and all trips in Ohio are by that method.

Harding played tennis years ago, but likes golf for recreation now. Neither reads a great deal but they are fond of the theatre and especially the more serious plays.

Harding has been primarily a newspaper publisher during his entire manhood, although he has carried on politics as a sideline most of the time. Identified with the Ohio Republican machinery since he became a voter, Harding, however, has held office only a comparatively short time. He was in the state senate from 1899 to 1903, was lieutenant governor the next two years, ran for governor but was defeated and went to the Senate in 1914. He rounds out his first term as U. S. senator March 4 next, just as he steps into the White House.

Harding was a political prodge of the late Sen. Foraker of Ohio, and was allied with his faction for many years. But by a strange twist of fate, Harding ran against Foraker for the senatorial nomination in 1911 and won, ending the public career of the famous Ohio boss who had brought him up in the political world.

Harding has a reputation throughout the country as being a second McKinley. He himself has often said he saw little resemblance, yet close friends of both see a parallel in their tariff views and in their willingness to be guided by advice, and in some of their mannerisms. Both have grave countenances and probably no one ever slapped either on the back.

Under the Harding administration it is likely that the "great man" theory of the president which has prevailed since Roosevelt's dominating personality reigned at the White House, will disappear at least for the time.

Those closest to Harding says he does not consider himself a powerful dominating figure in the sense that President Wilson or Theodore Roosevelt felt themselves. His big task in the next four years, as he is said to see it, is that of harmonizing the best brains of the country and focusing them on national problems. He feels deeply, his friends say, that there is a great crisis in world affairs which will continue until the league of nations question is settled. In that crisis, Harding expects to use the best minds of the country, as he puts it, in an effort to work out a solution which the entire nation will approve. He does not step into the presidency with the intention of making his will prevail in the nation's affairs beyond a certain point. His conception of the presidency is the reverse of President Wilson's according to those who know him best. Harding believes that the office is largely an executive one and that Congress, not the president, is the channel through which public opinion should express itself. If this analysis made by his close friends is correct, Harding, as President, will be inclined to lay back and permit Congress to shape the nation's policies, using his own powers only to carry the expressed wishes of Congress into effect. This is his theory, but whether the difficulties of practical politics will permit him to carry it out, only time can show.

Close observers predict a rather stormy four years for Harding. Although he held his party together through the campaign, there is the possibility of a rift within the organization over the league issue. If the tariff issue is raised, there will be an opportunity for more trouble. Senator Harding more than anyone else, possibly, recognizes this situation and is determined that his big contribution to the present situation shall be an effort to harmonize divergent views and bring them together on a compromise course which will not lean to the extreme either way.

Harding has an ability, which has often reveals to those close to him, of standing back and taking stock of himself. On these occasions the extreme simplicity of the man stands out. It is attributed in part to his simple early life.

His earliest sport was diving into the swimming pool at Caledonia, where he moved as a small boy. About the same time he got into long trousers he learned to play the cornet and joined the village band. Harding turning to account in another way, too. Mrs. Harding, before she was married, gave piano lessons to boys and girls in Marion. During their courtship Harding often brought his cornet over and played duets, with the future Mrs. Harding at the piano.

They have no children and there are no pets around the Harding house at present. Both are fond of dogs and kept a big collie for years, but one day it mysteriously took ill and died. Since then they have had no dog. Mrs. Harding tells several stories about her husband's love of animals. When Warren was a small boy he had a little pug nosed pup that one day got in the way of a street car and lost a hind leg. Harding would not permit the animal to be killed and carried him over to his father's office. Doctor Harding finally yielded to the pleas of his boy and sewed up the stump of the dog's leg. After it had healed, young Harding whittled out a wooden leg for the pup and it hobbled around Marion for several years on the peg leg that Warren Harding had made.

Senator Harding is a Baptist and Mrs. Harding is a Methodist. Harding is an Elk and a member of the Masonic order. He smokes cigars, and cigarettes, but prefers to dry smoke a long black stogy.

Harding is simple in his dress, wearing the conventional frock coat only when formal occasions demand it. At other times he wears an easy fitting two button sack coat. Harding never affects anything freakish in the way of string neckties or shaggy hair. His hair is always neatly trimmed and he wears turn down collars with neatly tied cravats—purple being his favorite color.

HARDING ISSUED STATEMENT

Marion, Nov. 2.--Convinced of his election to the presidency, Warren G. Harding, issued a statement tonight, saying that, instead of being exultant over the result, he was "more given to prayer to God to make me capable of playing my part."

Receiving the election returns at his home here, Mr. Harding declined during the early evening to make any comment, and issued his statement only after the figures had piled up majorities for him which, his advisers declared, made his election certain.

At the same time it became known that the Senator and Mrs. Harding had made plans for a vacation trip, to be carried out regardless of the result of the election, taking them for a rest next week in Texas and after that for an ocean voyage to the Panama Canal Zone. They will return to Marion, during early December.

The Senator's statement follows:

"Assuming the early returns are wholly dependable, I do not hesitate to say that I am pleased, of course. I am happy to utter my gratitude, but I am not exultant. It is not a personal victory. It is a renewed expression of confidence in Americanism, and a national call to the Republican party.

"It is all so serious, the obligations are so solemn thru, instead of exulting, I am more given to prayer to God to make me capable of playing my part, and that all these calls to responsibility may meet the aspirations and expectations of America and the world.

"I am sure the people who have voted the Republican ticket will understand my feeling that I should make no unstudied statement of policies at this time, beyond the expression made throughout the campaign."

Coincidently with the Senator's statement, Harry M. Daugherty, a member of the Republican Campaign Committee, made this statement here:

"It is the greatest victory in American politics, clearly foreshadowed and predicted. It is more than a partisan victory, as the result was contributed to by millions of Democrats. The women of the nation have quickly validated the conferring of the suffrage privilege as they sense correctly the issues and rallied to the cause of American and American institutions. The Republican party is fully conscious of the great responsibility reposed in this popular verdict and will faithfully keep its obligations."

At 11 o'clock tonight Senator Harding sent the following telegram to the Republican vice presidential candidate, Gov. Calvin M. Coolidge of Massachusetts:

"My heartiest congratulations over the great Republican victory to which your strength added so materially. You are to expect to play a full part in the coming Republican administration. Good wishes."

To Will Hays, the Republican national chairman, Mr. Harding telegraphed:

"My gratitude along with my gratulations on your capable and successful management of a great campaign."

Harding's home precinct goes Democratic

Marion, Nov. 2.--Four years ago this precinct had gone Democratic, but a reapportionment had changed precinct lines.

Surrounded by members of his family and a host of neighbors and personal friends, he received quietly at his home here the tribute of the millions who had voted to present to the fifth anniversary with the presidency of the United States.

The sum of confidence he has won for world leadership as he read the early returns of began to pour in a flood of congratulatory messages [illegible]

German "Doby Traps."

At the start of the reconstruction work in the devasted coal region about Lens, France the French were taught by several Canadian that the retreating Germans before flooding mines, had concealed along the walls innumerable "doby traps" says Popular Mechanics. Consequently in order that the slayer clinging with the ordinary inspectors, may not be fooled they hope the government to sends purchased from England an interesting apparatus for subsurface photography. Lowered down the flooded shaft, the apparatus photographs a ten foot subterranean area as it is dressed at the point of the shaft. A photographic series records each of the four walls.
